Re: MARTIN BORMANN,
NAZI GERMANY WAR CRIMINAL

A confidential source has furnished the following information:

The source was formerly employed in the Secretariat Aeronautiques by the Argentine Government at Buenos Aires. He obtained the following information about 1949:

The Office of the Secretary of Aeronautics was located at Talcasuano #1067, Buenos Aires. On the ground floor of such building was the office of Commandant Oscar Mariano Yague, who was in charge of the building. Armed guards constantly patrolled the building. In the basement of this building was a record room containing records of the Secretariat. Three armed guards were always on duty there also.

The informant became acquainted with various people in the building because of his work there. He became acquainted with one Captain Bayon Vago, who told him that Martin Bormann had come from Germany to Patagonia and that after his arrival there he had come to Buenos Aires where he had had plastic surgery done on his face. Subsequently the informant learned from one of the employees in the building, whose identity he did not recall, but who may have been Captain Vago, that Bormann had gone to live at a monastery at Corrintes, located near the border of Paraguay. At a later date a clerk, name not recalled in the record room in the basement of the building, showed the informant a photograph which displayed a man, in a Monk's habit tolling a bell in a monastery. The man stood with his back to the camera. The person showing the photograph said that this person was Martin Bormann.

The informant continued that he had gotten very friendly with a doctor whose first name was Raymon, and whose last name was not recalled by him. Dr. Raymon told the informant that he had done a number of remarkable plastic surgery operations on persons in Buenos Aires at the direction of the Argentine Government. He bragged that he had performed an operation on Martin Bormann so that Bormann would never be recognized. The informant stated that Dr. Raymon as a very wealthy individual who was attached to a hospital operated by the Secretary of Aeronautics.

The informant related that another person there in the building, whose identity he did not recall, but was possibly the record keeper in the basement, told him on one occasion that Bormann was going under the name of Duenio Jesu or Denio Jesu. These spellings were phonetic since the informant never saw the record card allegedly assigned to Bormann.

The informant went on to say that one Doctor Alfredo or Alberto Caridde, was a physician working in the hospital of the Secretary of Aeronautics in 1948. This individual was often called upon to treat people who had been abused by members of the Peron government. Dr. Caridde would know the identity and last name of Dr. Raymon. Dr. Caridde became disgusted with the political situation in Argentina and left Argentina to come to the United States. His present whereabouts are not known. Dr. Caridde is a white male, about 50 to 60 years of age in 1960, 5'8" tall, 160 lbs. of average size and is a native of Argentina.

The informant related that one Dr. Raymon Castraviejo, was a specialist in eye surgery who visited in Argentina in 1947 and would probably know the whereabouts of Dr. Caridde. He said he believed that Dr. Castraviejo was somewhere in New York City. He did not know any further background on Dr. Castraviejo nor could he give a description other than that he was of middle age and middle size.

The informant alleged that his memory of events in 1949 were not clear, because he himself had suffered brutal treatment at the hands of members of the Peron government. He was therefore not able to give more specific details in this matter.
